Chapter 1 by Sean Peacock

At the beginning of time 2 people lived and started their adventure. But no this is not real life it is the beginning of fantasy, but it was not true fantasy it was a video game fantasy one that was in coding still. A little boy had appeared his name is Da...

"Mom, I want dinner."

"What do you want Jake."

"The usual." Jake replied

As Jake went back to coding he realized the camera had turned on and a scanning program was scanning him. As it neared completion he looked at the character he had made and realized himself is going on to the character for the skin. Then he realized the program name: Pixilate. He tried to close it but it was to late. The world went black but not completely yet and he thought he saw his character stand there like he was in the real world.

"What the heck. I don't remember the program ever doing this unless it activated "that" tab." Jake said to the white that laid in front of him. Below him was lush grass with flowers here and there.

"Where will I go." he thought, "I didn't program the rest of the world yet or this grass. Did my

As Jake started walking more of the world started to form. A dirt path formed under him. He felt the code and realized the path and looked down. Ahead were 10 different paths and a locked door at the end of the main path. Each path had signs all of them said "Coming Soon" Except for the closest path. The sign there read: Road 1-1. After he read the sign he felt a huge rush of code flow around him as a huge building formed.

Jake said, "This was supposed to be an open world, 3-D, first person, adventure game."

"Oh, I am sorry." A voice said, "I will just delete the code."

"No, wait. it'll glitch the ga..."

"To late."

He was so worried he would die at that moment. So Jake closed his eyes, sat down and let it happen. He sat for 5 minutes and is not dead yet. He sighed in relief and opened his eyes and was shocked at what he found. There was darkness everywhere accompanied by floating chunks of the wall, floor, and ground. The ground was cracked but the road doors still stood on their coordinating path with no cracks. The cracks in the floor were leading into darkness but it was not a thin layer of ceramic, it was dirt. As he got up he shot his eyes over to the first gate and jumped over cracks to get there. He reached the sign and shot straight for the door and that is when his adventure truly begins.

"I will go back to the real world and create this game how I wanted to." He thought as light surrounded him.

Chapter 3 by Nathan Peacock

Jake waited as the new video game world came around him, code was rushing through his body. He looked at a giant grassy plain with a floating sign saying "World One." He entered the grassy plain, and was equipped with a basic stone sword and a wooden shield.

Jake said, "Hey what is this, why do i have this... fighting equipment? I didn't code this!"

The anonymous voice responded, "You have to survive in this world, get our own food, get better equipment, everything... by... your...self."

He looked around the world still having code rushing through his body, and seeing parts of the new world form around him.

Jake slowly walked through, he was afraid of everything at that moment. He looked around and noticed the forest was getting lighter as he walked through.

He saw a shining pond and figured it was a good place for rest.
